"STREAMING MEDIA" Streaming Media is a multimedia that is constantly accepted and served to finalize users when delivered by the provider. The drain verb refers to the shipping process or get means in this way. [A clarification is needed] The transmission refers to the means of sending media, instead of the media. The method of distinguishing the media is distributed specifically for telecommunications networks, since most shipping systems are transmitted inherently (eg, radio, television, transmission applications) or inherently non-fluid (for example, book , Audio CD). There are challenges with the transmission content on the Internet. For example, users whose Internet connections do not have enough bandwidth can experience a slow termination, delay or buffer content. And users who lack hardware systems or compatible software may not be able to flow some content. Direct transmission is sending real-time Internet content, such as television transmissions directly in air waves through television signals. The transmission of the Internet directly requires a source media form (for example, video camera, audio interface, screen recovery software), encoder for digitizing content, media editors and content delivery networks to distribute and send content . Direct transmission does not need to be registered at the origin, although often. Streaming is an alternative to downloading files, a process in which the end user gets all content files before viewing or listening to it. Through the transmission, end users can use their multimedia player to start playing digital videos or digital audio content before all files have been sent. The term "transmission means" can be applied to the media other than videos and audio, such as direct direct programs, ticker tape and real-time texts, all of which are considered "transmission text". Music elevators are one of the best popular muses available as media; At present, Internet, television is a common form of the transmission media. Some popular transmission services include Netflix, Disney +, Hulu, Prime Video, YouTube Video Share
